Biographical information

Carroll Cloar was a painter who earned national acclaim as a realist and surrealist. The majority of his works had conceptual ideas based on his memories from his childhood in east Arkansas. His paintings are characterized by flattened figures in landscapes formed of decorative patterning. One of his paintings was chosen to be among six paintings by American artists commemorating President Bill Clinton's inauguration in 1993.

James Carroll Cloar was born on January 18, 1913, on a farm approximately ten miles north of Earle in Crittenden County, Arkansas. The son of Charles Wesley Cloar (1864-1928) and Eva Julia Cloar (1880-1928), he had three brothers and one sister. He spent his childhood on his parents' cotton farm.

At seventeen, Cloar moved to Memphis, Tennessee, and earned a BA in English at Southwestern College (now Rhodes College). After graduating in 1934, he traveled to Europe for a carefree vacation, then returned to Memphis and enrolled at the Memphis Academy of Art. There, he studied with painter George Oberteuffer. In 1936, he moved to New York and attended the Art Students League in New York City, studying under Arnold Blanch, William McNulty, and Harry Sternberg. Cloar focused on drawing, with an ambition to be a comic strip artist. Teacher Ernest Fiene gave him his first experience with oil painting. It was at this time that Cloar also became interested in lithography, a printing method that allows the artist to draw on a flat stone.

From 1938 to 1940, Cloar worked from family photos to create a series of lithographic prints. One of these prints was chosen for showing in the Art in America Building for the 1939–1940 New York World's Fair. On the basis of these lithographs, the Art Students League awarded Cloar a McDowell Traveling Fellowship in 1940. Cloar used the grant to finance a journey through the western United States and Mexico. He had showings of his art in Denver, Colorado; Salt Lake City, Utah; and Salem, Oregon. While staying in Mexico City in 1941, Cloar started bringing his vague conception of his Arkansas heritage into focus. He created some lithographs and did a few paintings, none of which satisfied him. In later years, Cloar would burn many of his early works, including most of what he did in Mexico City.

At the start of World War II, he joined the U.S. Army Air Corps. He was shipped to Saipan in the Pacific Ocean, where he worked in communications and did odd jobs when he was not needed on the radio. He painted a mural for the enlisted men's club—a "history" of his B-29 squadron. For a stipend, he would paint pin-up girls on the noses of bombers.

In 1946, Cloar won a Guggenheim fellowship, and again he used the money to travel, returning to Mexico and continuing throughout Central and South America. A 1948 Life magazine spread on him, titled "Backwoods Boyhood" and illustrated with his autobiographical lithographs, gained him national attention. In 1953, he returned to Memphis and produced his first one-man exhibit, having created fourteen paintings that year. The next year, he went back to Europe to study, visiting Italy and Spain. When he returned to Memphis in 1955, he settled in the city buying a house on South Greer, though he continued to travel in South America through 1959.

Cloar continued to produce paintings for the rest of his life, working in casein tempera—and later acrylic—on large canvases, depicting images drawn from photographs and his own memories. His style has been described as both primitive and progressively modern. It is grounded in reality and touched by surrealistic, or dream-like, overtones, as in the work Hostile Butterflies, in which four children run toward a house in the distance while butterflies and leaves swirl around the foreground of the painting, a seemingly innocent scene with a strangely ominous sense about it. Cloar's work is so difficult to categorize that scholars began to describe it as within the genre of "magic realism." In the 1977 catalog of his work, titled "Hostile Butterflies and Other Paintings", Guy Northrop notes that Cloar tackled the themes of "birth, life and death, of the family, friends, work, school, religion, man's relationships to other men and to nature, of hopes and dreams and faith, or memories and desires, of virtues and morality, sin and failure, of fears and anxieties, hardships, love, pleasures, rewards and intermezzos—all these are universals." Cloar described his images as "American faces, timeless dress and timeless customs...the last of old America that isn't long for this earth."

In 1960, Cloar launched into a series of six parodies that played on the styles of more famous artists, such as Abstract Expressionist painter Willem de Kooning, Pacific Coast mystic Morris Graves, surrealist Yves Tanguy, and abstractionist Piet Mondrian. From the 1960s to the 1980s, he continued to paint in his distinctive style, creating some of his most famous paintings, including "Where the Southern Cross the Yellow Dog" (1964), a painting that references W. C. Handy's famous "Yellow Dog Blues." In 1969, Cloar heard about the death of an elderly African-American photographer in Earle. He visited the man's widow, and she let him take what he wanted from her late husband's work. Cloar used these photographs as inspiration for his work over the next twenty years.

In 1991, the University Gallery at Memphis State University (MSU—now the University of Memphis) displayed seventy of his works, including lithographs, paintings, and drawings. Also at this time, he received the Distinguished Achievement Award for Creative and Performing Arts from MSU. From November 1992 to January 1993, the Memphis Brooks Museum of Art presented "Playing Favorites", an exhibition containing twenty-five works that Cloar selected. As the exhibition closed in January 1993, Cloar's painting "Faculty and Honor Students, Lewis Schoolhouse" was chosen to be among six paintings by American artists commemorating President Bill Clinton's inauguration.

On April 10, 1993, Cloar died from a self-inflicted gunshot wound after a long battle with cancer. He was survived by his third wife, Patricia, whom he married in 1973. His body was cremated and his ashes scattered across his old home place in Earle.

Institutions holding Cloar's works include the Arkansas State University, Arkansas Arts Center in Little Rock, Art Museum of the University of Memphis, Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden in Washington, D.C., Memphis Brooks Museum of Art, New York Metropolitan Museum of Art, Crittenden County Museum, Museum of Modern Art in New York, Library of Congress, Chase Manhattan Bank, and Whitney Museum.

Scope and contents

The collection comprises correspondence, scrapbooks, diaries, newspaper and magazine clippings, photographs and photograph albums, notebooks, sketch pads and drawings. There is a significant group of materials documenting his life from his school days in Earle to his time at Southwestern and his travels in the United States and beyond. A proficient writer as well as a gifted artist, Cloar had several articles published and some of his manuscripts are in the collection.

Catalogues of his exhibitions constitute a significant group of materials along with clippings and other published items which trace his life as an artist. The largest group is the photographs, either shot by Carroll and Pat Cloar or collected by them, to be used as raw material for Cloar's art.

Processing information

During the processing of the collection, it was necessary for preservation reasons to remove items from a binder and magnetic photograph album pages. In addition, duplicate photocopies and clippings and other ephemera were removed, and two copies of Life (Vol. 24, No. 4, 1948 January 26) were removed because they were not complete. A total of 0.25 cubic feet of such materials were discarded.

The Special Collections Department is grateful for the assistance of the Tennessee Historical Records Advisory Board which provided, through a 2015 State and National Archival Partnership grant from the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, funding to rehouse the drawings, sketch books, some photograph albums and yearbooks in the collection.

Pat Cloars's photograph collection:

"This box of old photos and albums are virtually all Pat Cloar's acquisitions, bought first with Carroll in mind. He seldom used the early ones for raw material. The photos are easy to date... Some of these photos are historically interesting (flood, machinery, etc.), but few identifiable as to person." Pat Cloar, March 2000.
