Biographical information

Ronald “Butch” Alford (1941-2016) served in the Air Force and received a Bachelor of Science degree in journalism and a Master of Education degree from Memphis State University. He worked as a copyboy and reporter for the Commercial Appeal before joining the staff of the Associated Press in August 1965. It was during this period when the erroneous report that James Meredith had been shot dead was issued by the Associated Press instead of the correct report that “James Meredith had been shot in the head.” This collection includes various accounts of that incident.

Alford served as assistant public information director at Memphis State University and later as the first information director of Shelby State Community College. He was also information director with the Tennessee Higher Education Commission. Alford served on the Memphis Board of Review which was created in 1968 to prevent the dissemination of obscene materials to juveniles. During his tenure, the board was sued by several movie exhibitors for violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution. The court ruled that the Memphis Board of Review was powerless to enforce the city’s anti-obscenity ordinance.

Scope and contents

This collection includes a variety of materials related to the careers of Ronald “Butch” Alford. Much of the collection focuses on two periods of time in Alford’s life: his position at the Associated Press’ Memphis Bureau and his time working on the Memphis Board of Review. This collection includes materials related to Alford’s service as a volunteer public relations professional during President Ford’s visit to Memphis in 1976 and President Carter’s visit to Memphis in 1978.

Along with materials related to Alford’s careers in news media and public relations, there are accounts from others in the public relations field that cover the James Earl Ray trial, the death of Elvis Presley, and some of the history of public relations in Memphis, Tennessee.
