Biographical information

Few families were more intimately involved in the public life of Memphis than that of Jacob Joseph Peres (1830-1879), who established the house here in 1859. Born in Haarlem, The Netherlands, Jacob was during his life a rabbi, lawyer, scholar, businessman, and public servant. He moved to the United States in 1857 and then settled in Memphis to become the first rabbi of Congregation Children of Israel. Jacob and Eva Chuts Peres had two sons, Hardwig (1859-1948) and Israel Hyman (1867-1925), and a daughter, Sarah (1857-1941). Jacob and his sons served as head or member of the Memphis School Board, and each was prominent in fraternal, charitable, and religious organizations. Israel graduated from Yale Law School in 1891 and gained an M.A. from Yale in 1899, practiced law in Memphis and was appointed Chancellor of the tenth Chancery Division. Hardwig was born in Philadelphia, Penn., and left school early to join his father's brokerage firm. He was active in civic and Jewish affairs, and a supporter of the Zionist cause.

Scope and contents

The great bulk of the material consists of printed reports and programs of the various (often Jewish) organizations with which they were involved. The personal and private correspondence is mostly that of Hardwig Peres and is typically concerned with the American-Jewish response to the growing threat of anti-Semitism in Europe in the 1930's and the resulting Holocaust.

More information on the family may be found in Samuel Shankman's The Peres Family, Kingsport, Tenn.: Southern Publishers, 1938, and in Charles P.J. Mooney (ed.), The Mid-South and its Builders, Memphis: Mid-South Biographic and Historical Association, 1920.
